Canadian Missionaries in West Africa Happy in Their Work

Mrs. Brigadier Burton recently re-ceived a very interesting letter from Ensign and Mrs. Bowers, Canadlan Officers, who are now stationed in Nigeria, West Africa. They are very Angeria, west Africa. They are vehappy in their present appointment happy in their present appointment at The Army's School for Boy's In Ebutte-Metta.

The Ensign writes that there were folk who intimated that they would be unable to stand the climate, and the change of food. Many white people find it impossible to live for any length of time in the country. But their predictions have not been realized. "We knew it was the place to which God called us," the Ensign continues, "and I asked Him to give me a promise, and Ife gave me the 91st Psalm. Strange to say, the Field Secretary read it at our farewell from Windsor, and two people wrote a verse of it in my autograph album. It was right from God and has been a wonderful help and blessing since coming here. The doctor rold us that we are in danger of having one of the worst plagues in the history or this country. But in this Psalm i have the promise that it shall not come nigh my dwelling!" Such faith, we believe, will be rewarded. We ask the prayers of our comrades of Canada East on behalf of the Ensign and his wife, and for every Missionary of our worldwide Army who is oracely uplifting the banner of the Cross.

A PRAYER

A PRAYER

Blessed Spirit, we pray Thee to come upon us in orcher musture, purifying our hearts, enlightening our understanding, and sanctifying our service. Keep our minds from error and our hearts from sin. Energize us with Thy love and use us in the leading of men and women to the Cross. Be constantly near us, abiding with us and guiding us unerringly through the pitfatis every hour presents. Multiply the qualities of our hearts, and increase our determination to live holy lives. We ask it all through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

Prayer, Bible reading and worship are being neglected and as a result there is a decline in morality, truth, honesty and godilness.

The enemy is coming in like a flood and God is calling loudly for men and women to stand in the gap and stem the awful tide of iniquity.

Looking back over Bible history we can find many notable examples of men who obeyed the Divine call and did signal service for their people.

Abraham stood in the gap when God revealed His purpose to destroy Sodom and Comorrah because their sin was very grievous. Every prayer was answered. When Abraham stopped praying the judgment of God fell upon the city. Even then God remembered Abraham and delivered Lot. In Indement God remembered Marham and delivered Lot. THE COMING of seventy ardent young Salvationists into the Training Garrison for the Centenary Session is surely evidence that there is a response in the ranks of The Army to the call of the Lord for workers to repair the gaps that sin is haking among the people of our land.

HE WAS a young mun of twenty years, just at the threshold of the will its open doors of opportunity and diverse paths leading to success or failure. Thus his college days came to a sad and abrupt end. The passing time no longer filled him with high anticipations, the long nights brought no dreams of achievement, the gloony days no bright visions of the seen, and the years rolled by, carelessly carrying him to an unknown future as the waves of the sea carry an empty bottle to an unknown shore. HUNG!

FEW months ago in a public house in a small vallage in Stafford a tall. distinguished looking young man bought a copy of "The War Cry" from a Salvationist. Instead of putting it into he pecket unread as so many do, he begon to puruse the pages. It happened that a very striking story concerning two men upon whom the death sentence had been passed came under his eye. One of these men was eventually reprieved.

One of these men was eventually reprieved.
This little story set this young man thinking furiously of his own life.
On the following Sunday evening when the Lieutenaut was making his way to the Hall he passed a young man and his wife, and was struck by the particular attention they were paying to him. Leaving the building again he noticed the same young man surveying the Hall half suspiciously. The Lieutenant could see a fine opportunity. He approached the man, shook hands with him, invited them to the Hall, found them a nice seat as near the pentient-form as possible, and then went on his way to the Openair relocing and praying.

Whilst the inside meeting was in progress the stranger's gaze never left the platform, and immediately the invitation was given "The War Cry" reader sprang to his feet and knelt at the mercy-seat.

Immediately he rose from the penitent-form he went across and spoke to his wife, and she in turn gave her heart to God. He also brought his mother and the family to the foot of the Cross,

Soon the new converts were seen Soon the new converts were seen in Army uniform, and they volunteered to clean the Hall, a task which they carried out most efficiently. His wife and himself are now Songsters, and he disposes of something like eleven dozen copies of "The War Cry" every week from door to door. The three children attend the Young People's Corps, and happiness reigns in the home.—"London War Cry."

He received plenty of attention then. They gave him a pleee of sandpaper and he rubbed it on his finger

God does not always use great and powerful weapons to bring men to submission. In the care of this acreess backender God used the weak, hesitant voice of his nervous wife.

Touched the Right String

Touched the Right String

This was not the first time such a plea had been made, but for the first time it touched the right string and offened his callous conscience: it was the first blow at this man's God-forgeting heart. The words. "Yes, dear, will law the circus, and I will do it now," were uttered after a moment's reflection, but he was resolute and determined—he meant it! The outwork of the fortress of his soul had been won, even though he and his vife new not that God nor religion thated a part in the decision.

The following Sunday morning, while complete with the weekly newspaper, the second blow fell and a decisive stroke it was; for in the midst of an interesting sport column is little girl canc in the room with her brother, and with a tender, pleading voice said, "Daddy, may we go to Sunday School to-day like other children?" The words fell upon his heart with greater force and effect than the largest drop-hammer upon a piece of molten metal. For years he had not darkened a church door, his little ones had never been to Sunday School, and the name of God had not been heard in his home except it was in profanity and blasphemy. With his mind in a maze it must have been that he gave consent, for that been that he gave consent, for that afternoon the children heard the marvellous story of Jesus for the first time.

That week the prevailing sound to h.m was the voice of his child, say-windows, and a successful career, he viewed those days from a drunkard's home and features lined with the marks of premature age. What a calamitous contrast between the prospect and the reality!

The Open-air service proceeded, and to the astonishment of the street audience the Cadets commenced a red-hot Prayer-meeting, kneeling at the side of the crowded thoroughfare. How they pleaded for men and women to decide for Christ! The drum lay in the centre of the ring; prayers were offered, exhortations given, and certainly the presence of the Almighty was felt in that hallowed place. Greater and more attentive became the crowd, and amongst The Inner Vision ing, "Daddy, may we go to Sunday School to-day?" The words haunted him from dawn till sundown and throughout the night.

As Sturday night arrived he was to be seen strolling along the city streets. He had again been striving to quench his thirst with that deadly poison which rains soul as well sody, but still the childish voice was not stifled. Through the down-town streets he rambled until strains of music reached his car. Carelessly he went in the direction of the music, and suddenly, when he had arrived at a certain corner, he was confronted by a brigade of Salvation Army men Cadets—students for the ministry. What reminiscences were suddenly recalled! Once he was yearnest about men's souls! Once he was earnest about men's souls! Once he was zealous for God!

With his child's voice still penetrating his soul, he reviewed those days, but, instead of looking back from a beautiful pulpit, a gorgeous edifice with artistic facade and stained-glass them was the miserable backslider who was thinking of the past, the present, and the future, and—everything. His child's voice seemed to echo in his heart when, suddenly, a hand was placed on his arm and a voice was heard to ask, "Will you accept Jesus to-night?"

A lost Saviour, buried talent, shattered hopes, bitter experience, a lost soul, all appeared before him in those few vital seconds. Sixteen years had passed, years as fruitless as a withered tree, years nearer the grave years nearer mearther the grave years nearer meant he grave years nearer meant he was halting at the border line of the Kingdom of God. Should he forsake that which had brought disappointment, failure and a blighted life? Should he step into the sunlight of renewed hope?

To the one whose hands rested upon his arm he related his pitiful story. What a tale it was! Disaster! Yes, that was all true, but now he heard of One who came to bring light where darkness reigned, liberty where was bondage, beauty where the desert stood, harmony where was discord, success to replace failure. Another kindly word of invitation was spoken, and then he not only felt a friendly hand, but he saw outstretched to him a Hand pierced with cruel nails and covered with blood. He must yield A that moment, heedless of the curious onlookers, he stepped from the sidewalk and knelt at The Army drum-head What a romance the curb-side Army drum has made! What a romance this scene depicted!

The Inner Vision

The Damascus road one day at noon became a soul's birthplace. Those who witnessed the scene looked upon the road and pereviewed a certain Saul of Tarsus and a bright light; that was the limit of their vision. Saul saw Jesus! So the witnesses of this street meeting could see a middle-aged man in the cent.re of The Army Open-sir ring; they saw him kneeling on a Toronto pavement; before him they saw a drum, that was their horizon. In contrast to their short-sightedness this man's soul rose until he saw a rugged Cross upon which was hanging the hleeding Christ, his Saviour.

Some events are indescribable and too sacred to record, and what took place during those few minutes is beyond the capacity of a tongue to tell or of a press to publish; only this is known, that He who makes men "free indeed" had severed the cords of unbelief, had destroyed the Devil's work of drunkenness, gambling and other vices, and had raised a new man, sober and righteous, the work of Grace.

The curious crowd increased in size and gave an attentive ear to his tale of sorrow and disappointment—a human story after all; but now another page had been added to this personal history, the contents of which soared above all that had gone before, for it was a chapter of a resurrected hope. Following the reletion of this .emarkable episode, two other drink-controlled victims followed the same Star of Hope and knelt at the drum-head, the first two to be definitely influ-need for righteousness by our student. All agree that it was a wonderful change.

A New Morrow

A New Morrow

A New Morrow

A day's activities had ended. On the outside, instead of brilliantly-lighted streets and a secthing mass of people intent on the business of supplying their temporal needs, were darkened windows and but an occasional footstep here and there. On the inside, with one or two exceptions, while the clock was striking the early morning hours, King Slumber held its magic power over house and street, but there was one in that city whose sleep was more peaceful, more restful and sweeter than others, for although his past remained indelible on history's page he had found One who was willing to forget and who had given him a clear, unwritten sheet on which to start a new morrow.

The pangs of conscience keep almost as many people awake as an overloaded stomach.

Everyone has two lives, so to speak: the inner life, or heart life, and the outer life, or our lives as men see them. This is the distinction between character and reputation is what men say you are, and character is what you are.

MORE ABOUT "A TOWN WITHOUT MONEY"

N LAST week's issue, the writer, speaking of the difficulties associated with the establishment of The Army's Leper Colony on the Island of Poelae si Tjauang, told of how The Army was asked to take over the Colony and run it on the same lines, as its other successfully-managed Leper Settlements in Java. One of the evils rampant among the sufferers, many of whom are Chinese, was gambling, and to overcome this Major Scheffer, the Officer then In charge, decided to abolish money and introduced a system of book credits. The writer continues:

charge, decided to abolish money and introduced a system of book credits.

The writer continues:
Soon, however, the Major made another discovery. This community of mortally-stricken people had been preyed upon by moneylenders in their midst, men who managed to concent their extortionate practices until the abolition of money hit them so hard that they cried out and so revealed that system of Life Assurance actually existed amongst the Chinese laborers. For instance, they paid to the "insurance main" small sums, in return for which five guilders (about Ss.) was, after their death, paid out to the persons who said prayers and ate pork on behalf of their departed spirits.

The assurance brokers were soon lealt with. Then arose the question of debts. Internal trading had been allowed on the Colony. Gambling debts had already been declared void, but legitimate obligations could not be so ensily disposed of.

Paying up Debts

The Major announced that on a certain day he "would sit in front of the kitchen and pay all debts." He trusted the ereditors to state curately what was due to them.

eurately what was due to them.

The first claimant was a native priest, who demanded twenty-seven guilders. The second had acted as a buyer for other Colonists. In all, nearly seventy asked for compensation, and the Colony's "Recreation Box," patronized by philanthropic visitors was mulcted to the exent of over 450.

The debts were naid by the profess.

The debts were paid by the various amounts being credited on the Colonists' "books."

amounts being credited on the Colonists' "books."

While this new system was being gradually established, the more directly spiritual work of the Salvationist directors proceeded unabated, and the result sustained them in their difficult tasks. Little by little the voluntary eongregations at the meetings increased. This vital indication of growing confidence in The Army encouraged the Officer's to greater efforts in teaching the Colonists the good news of Salvation through the sacrifice of Jesus Christ, and presently they were overjoyed at the sight of some of the Chinese seeking and obtaining the assurance of Salvation.

"You have seen the Colony to-day," said the Major simply, at the ond of this fassinating recital.

We have seen it and have marvelled that a village of people suffering from so awful a disease could appear

The whole system consists of a concerted effort to help the men and not merely to punish them, to equip them for good citizenship in the future as the best atonement for the injury done to seelety in the past. Instead of imposing physical hardship upon them, everything possible is done to make the men as comfortable as the necessary restraint will permit. will permit.

This does not mean that they escape punishment for the crimes of which they have been guilty; there still remains the separation from home and loved ones, and in many cases the hardest part of a prison sentence is the anxiety about wives and children for whom the man can do nothing because of his own folly, and those who have experienced suffering of this kind know that it is infinitely harder to bear than any physical discomfort.

One of a man's first experiences on entering the Penitentiary is an interview with the Chaplain, whose first eare is an effort to develop in the newcomer a frame of mind which will enable him to henefit by the opportunities offered him in the institution. He is then presented with a Bible and a song-book, which he keeps in his eell and is encouraged to use as much as possible. In duc course he is put to work at his trade, if he has one, and if he has not, he is given an opportunity of learning the one for which he shows an aptitude. Blacksmith, carpenter, painter, stoneeuter, tailor, electricain, engineer, farmer, and shoemaker are among the trades at which the men are employed.

If he is particularly interested and desirous of mastering a trade, he can have technical books to study, as much as he wishes. If, on the other hand, he has been 'sprived of ordinary educational advantages, there is a school on the premises and he is allowed to work half a day and go to school the other half.

A number of men who were unable to read when they entered the Penitentiary have made most commendable progress along educational lines. There is a splendid library, the books of which are at the disposal of those who desire to use them.

PROGRESS IN KOREA

PROGRESS IN KOREA

PROGRESS IN KOREA

Proce has been under Japanese rule, and much progress has been made during that period, according to a writer in Current History.

The Koreans are described as the most backward race in the Orient Centuries of misrule have ground from them all ambition to toil for the future. Before the annexation truth and honesty were handleaus, religion had degenerated into gross superstition, torture was synonymous with justice and graft with government. Of medical science and sanitation the average Korean knew nothing.

The efforts of the Japanese to improve things were met at first with sullen resentment culminating in open rebellion in 1919.

This resulted in salutary reforms.

sullen resentment culminating in open rebellion in 1019.

This resulted in salutary reforms in administration and, under the direction of Viscount Saito, a change for the bett 'r was gradually brought about. The population has doubled since 1906, which strikingly shows what better living conditions throughout a formerly pest-ridden country have done.

Japanese forestry experts have reclothed the denuded mountain-sides, and many irrigation projects have been completed.

The number of schools has grown from 100 to 2,540. The condition of the poor has been greatly improved. Until ten years ago many of them were forced to subsist in the early Spring on nothing but grass and the roots of trees. There was no work and no money.

Now there is work to do for all who are willing to do it.

On his retirement after eight years as administrator, Viscount Saito declared that the keynote of the Karean problems is patience—"always remembering that the Korean of to-day is still a niteous person, saffering with compound interest for the sins of his ancestors and the camulative effect of bad government endured for centuries."

SAFETY EDUCATION NEEDED

WITH THE hazards of industry and the toll of the highways yearly increasing the number of accidents, a great need has arisen for safety education. It is the viewpoint of a writer in a technical journal that safety education rests primarily upon the inculcation of a new point of view on accidents, and the value of human life. It seeks to teach the individual that accidents do not "happen," but are caused, and that the causes are preventable.

Safety has turned out to be immediately correlated with alectness and intelligence. Accidents are stanid. It is the instrumed, maler child that gets hart.

The writer goes on to say that out of an average group of 25,000 people we can predict that twenty-one will be accidentally killed during the next twolve months.

In addition to saving lives and helping to train and educate those who were saved. Mr. Vickery believed there had come a by-product of supreme importance from the relief. still at work in the kitchen of the missionaries' house.

It was a kitchen typical of the villages of Java. In the centre of the low room was the fireplace, which consisted of four large river boulders. Upon these the pot was still set with a blazing wood fire burning underneath. A chimney was unthought of, so the room was full of blinding smoke, which would have made any white man choke and sent him running to the door with smarting eyes, but which did not apparently inconvenience the natives in any way wmatsoever. For the more elaborate baking of bread and such like there was a copper pan on lega. This had a special lid covering, so that in addition to the fire underneath the pan, burning charcoal could be placed on the lid to give an oven effect in baking. The charcoal had, of course, to be fanned, sometimes by the hour, with a native fan.

All the cooking utensils, such as spoons, forks, cups, etc., were made by combinations of bamboo and the shells of the cocoanust, and the pots dangled from long pieces of stick levered into the west and waft of the plaited hamboo walls.

There was a large earthen water vessel covered with a cane matting lid in one corner of the little shack, a bamboo amben (or bed) where the native Lama and Sorot rosted and lived, stood in another; and strewn in disorder about the earthen floor was the day's wood supply.

Kasimin and Roes entered unobserved through

"What's the news?" was her salutation. The boys, nervous and contused, waited for each other to speak, and did not answer.

"Have you had news from the Headman Kasimin, or does the 'imam' wish to become a Christian?" inquired Lama half anxiously, half humorously—for she was somehow prescient of evil in the air.

"My father, the headman, has sent us as his messengers, Lama." said Kasimin at length. "Our message is that you must pay your rice field taxes within a week."

"But they were paid a month ago. Did not Sorot sell two goats and a hundred cocoanuts at the market to get the money? Yes, of course!"

"Nay, O Lama, you are mistaken," replied Kasimin with an evil grin.

Lama, in a state of great agitation, called her husband.

Sorot entered with his clothes wringing wet. He had just returned from bathing in the nearby river, but, native fashion, had not troubled to remove any of his clothes. The mercury is perpetually high in the tropies, so they would soon dry on him, and with no evil effects.

Lama explained volubly to Sorot the purpose of the boys mission, and the wrinkled face of the old man became still more wrinkled and serious as he listened.

"Yes," he said at length with decision, "the taxes were paid last new moon, and Mas Ranadikrama (the headman) I remember gave me a very pretty receipt."

Sorot rambiled on for some time in a half-demented way.
Then Kasimin, carefully primed previously by his father, interjected. "But my father is con-

The demands of the headman were preparations. Cense to boil the water. That would near fevers and probably death for her white officers get water from a stream nearer than the farged best one? Just as bod. Who could drik water from streams where all the folks in the ullage bathed and washed themselves?

Ask for higher wagss? She knew the wills missionaries were poor and could not pay then. Refuse to get grass for the horses? That would mean they would quickly die, and the wad of Captain Sinclair and Lieutenant Sellar well speedily be orippled. Cense to cook for her Officers and purchase the only food that they call afford—native rood at the village markels? She was a Christian, and could never do that.

For some time Sorot sided with his wife, but well as the state of the could never do that.

he was not a Christian, and gradually beame by the threats from the headmans so.

THE SIGHT of the beggars in the large Indian cities is a sight to move the hardest of hearts.

Their plight, sitting by the roadside with limbs wrapped in filthy bandages, or displaying terrible sores to the gaze of the onlookers, is deplorable indeed. One looks at their distorted bodies, marks the havoc wrought by disease, and wonders how it can be possible for the human frame to endure such great pain and misery.

"Were it not for this Camp, many of these people would have died in misery," said a gentleman recently when he visited it and saw the comrades carrying on their work of mercy. It is a fact difficult to realize as one looks at crowd of a hundred people enjoying the rice, curry, chepatties, sweatmeats, and fruit provided for a special treat. Those who are able to come to the feast will never be able to take their place in life's battle; but thanks to the months of good food, attention and compulsory cleanliness they look remarkably well. Many, of course, were too ill or too deformed even to make their way out of the compound, and for them other arrangements are made. "Hungary, still a proud and once a very great country, is slowly emerging out of great trouble, a legacy of the War. Its Government has large problems before it, chiefly financial. Nevertheless, those of its leading members I saw insisted on helping us with the expenses of the new Home, and all the banks contributed. In my present wanderings round Central Europe in places where The Army is still not strong, and where every new friend counts, it is cheering to find how the good name of The Army has gone before us.

Of Its First Army Meetings

Arrangements are being made for a commemoration tablet to be placed outside the house at Varnamo, Sweden, where the late Commissioner Ouchterlony Inved when she was attracted to The Army by the meetings which the General began in the neighborhood.

In the summer of 1878 the General visited Varnamo to stay with Mr. Billups, an English engineer. He had gone to recuperate his health, but could not refrain from holding neetings. Henna Ouchterlony, who was already converted, was attracted, and as a result The Army's work in Sweden was begun in 1882.

The tablet will be erected in connection with jubilee celebrations at Varnamo.

Another comrade who resides in the district is Brother Dixon, who was a Local in the Old Country under the Commissioner many years ago. He, too, was delighted to receive a visit from our Leaders.

Mrs. Maxwell was recently one of a party of prominent Toronto people who were invited by the Toronto Harbor Commission to take a trip in the steamer "Dalhousie City" for the purpose of viewing the improvements along the waterfront. She made good use of what she observed in subsequent meetings, drawing many useful lessons from various happenings.

The Commissioner spent an Seresting morning at the Toronto Police Court recently, accompanied by Colonel Morchen, Major McElliney, Commandant Buston and Brother A.J. Copping. The services rendered by The Army to the unfortunates who appear in this court were noted by our Leader with much satisfaction.

A SMALL, private, but intensely interesting meeting of the leaddon was held in the Florence Booth Hall at Clapton, London, on August 22nd. The occasion was ostensibly two-fold—i, e. a welcome given by the Commissioners and Colonels to Comenissioner Lucy Booth-Hellberg on her appointment to International Headquarters, and her farewell for a tour of South Africa, where she will represent the General at the Congresses and inspect the work.

Whilst these two objects were well to the fore, a great deal was crowded into the meeting, including a greeting to Commissioner Whatmore, who is visiting the Homeland from Australia; the farewell of Lt.-Commissioner Vlas on his appointment as Territorial Commander of Holland; and the reception of Congluence and the company of the property of the condition of the Holland; and the reception of Congluence and the conditions of the condition of t his regret at the absence of our beloved General.

Regret at General's Absence

The Chief of the Staff, accompanied by Mrs. Higgins, piloted the proceedings and spread his geniality over everyone present, and struck a note that brought forth a feeling response from all when he mentioned his regret at the absence of our beloved General.

It is quite a common thing for people to make their presence felt; few can make their presence felt; few can make their absence so poignant as to produce the effect that the General's absence does in gatherings of this kind. The up-to-date report which the Chief had just received from Mrs. Booth, however, was of a most encouraging nature. She feels that there has been, during the last week or ten days, a much more substantial progress than there has been at any time. The General is more able to enter into the affairs of The Army, and whilst it is wise to refrain from burdening him too much, it is a joy to know that he loves to hear and to enter into those things which have filled his life and which he so much loves.

In welcoming Commissioner Lucy, the Cheef with Chemicker.

things which have finited his file and which he so much loves.

In welcoming Commissioner Lucy, the Chief said: "The Commissioner has been, as you know, appointed by the General to an important position attached to International Headquarters, and her special duty will be to go about the world and represent the General in her travels, to conduct Congresses and meetings, and to lo for him the work which he will be unable to do because of his inability to be in more than one place at one time. The Commissioner has had a very wide experience. Practically all her Officership has been spent in other lands. She has lived in many parts of the world, India, Switzerland, France. Denmark and Norway, all have claimed her service. For nine years she has fought bravely and well in that rugged land of Norway, a land which, whilst it holds true warriors of Salvation and fine representatives of The Salvation Army, yet is one of those difficult commands because of its scattered nature, the wile areas that have to be covered and the difficulties of transportation which many in this room would stagger at and not be able to face as the Commissioner has done during all these years.

"We thank her for her labors, we admire her for all the years she has put in in doing her utmost to heln near and women everywhere to the Lord Jesus Christ, and we believe that in this new appointment which will bring different responsibilities, she will shoulder them in the same whole-hearted fashion as she has done in the past . . I commend her to God and pray that she may have journeying mercies and that her visit to South Africa will be amougst the happiest events of her life."

Commissioner Lucy, looking much younger than the number of birthdays to which she confessed, thanked the Chief for what he had asid and assured her hearers that white she was glad to return to England, her heart still turned with affection to her people in Norway. "I feel as though I had had my share of travel and a good share of the public side of life, but I have taken this appointments, as I have taken all my appointments, as from God, and I believe that He will use me in the way which will be the best way to help the dear General and The Army."

The Commissioner allowed an intimate peep into her early struggles as she told of her own desire to become a nurse, and how, at the age of nineteen, The Army Mother had given her one week in which to decide what her life-work should be.

"I had a little attic in the roof which I could call my own. There was hardly any room to turn round, but I remember the struggles I went through by the side of that little bed. Everything that was human in me shrank from Officership and all my desires turned towards nursing. But one night, on my knees, I lost sight of father and mother and everything else and I saw God looking down at me and He told me that He wanted ine to be a soul-winner, and He showed me that I could best be a soul-winner by taking my place as an Officer in The Salvation Army. I just remember one little prayer I prayed as a sort of parting with my life's ambition, I said, "Very well, Lord, I will be an Officer. I want to be what You want me to be, but if You can manage it, let me be a ... (Continued on page 12)

address; a story which convicted no less than it enthralled, "Christ will not remain in the company of people unless they go the way He wants to travel," was a significant thought to which she gave expression. Again she said, with force. "What we want in The Salvation Army is not supposition, but certainty." Mrs. Maxwell injected a little humor into her remarks—which lost none of their pungency on that account—when she hoped the men-Cadets would feel it on Friday when there was no bulky may envelope forthcoming. Similarly she hoped the women-Cadets would feel it when scrubbing the corridors instead of "tapping a typewriter, or taking dictation from a very nice gentlennan." Such reflection, when viewed in the right perspective, is good for one; they will realize that they have exchanged the shadow for the substance; the artificial fur the real.

Red-Hot Open-Airs

Red-Hot Open-Airs

The Cadets made their first acquaintance with Toronto's down-town district, in several red-hot Open-airs, held 'tween meetings. They rendered a fine account of themselves, and the afternoon and night attendances in the Temple were doubtless augmented as a consequence. There is every evidence that the musically-inclined men-Cadets have been "improving the shining hour" since their arrival on Thursday: a Band of seventeen has already been organized under Captain Loriner, and contributed acceptably in the Open-air.

The afternoon indoor event fairly seethed with interest and enthusiasm—and that expresses it but mildly. To the martial strains of a vivacious march played by the Temple Band (Bandmaster Haungam) the Cadets invaded the platform, several bearing shields indicative of the Division from which they hail, and the number who have come from the Division. This is the wording the shields hore. London, 8; Halifax, 6; North Bny, 2; Windsor, 6; Montreal, 4; Ottawa, 1; Saint John, 7; Hamilton, 19; Sydney, 4; Toronto East, 6; Toronto West, 8. As they filed proudly on to the platform and stool facing the audience they were greeted voriferously. The numbers on the shields convey very little, but—well, there will be many at little "Mutton bome" sorely missing their representative at this moment; many a mother's heart will be full and her eyes dim, as she thinks of her daughter or son, far away in the Garrisan. But "God is Love"; that is what we same, and because He is Lave, He understands and sympathizes with the lonely one at home—the one who has made the real sacrifice. And it was about this incompresentable average and a superscript.

Good Congregational Singing

To properly appreciate the grandeur of congregational singing one needs to hear such an audience as jammed the Temple on this Sunday afternoon sing "My Jesus I love Thee," to "Go, bury thy sorrow," They almost rivalled the Exhibition Chorus—in volume, if not in harmony! The Commissioner was elated about it—so much so that he had the last verse repeated, for the special benefit, as he remarked, of the visitus from lands afar. He referred to Adjuant and Mrs. Ashhy, of South Africa, and Ensign Clinton Eacott, of China. They were duly impressed, we are sure!

Cadets Introduced

Cadets Introduced

True to his promise of the morning that the Cadets should have the "flon's share" of the meetings, our Leader relinquished the "reins" to the Training Garrison Principal. In lieu of shaking hands personally with the Cadets, the Colonel explained that he was going to give the audience an introduction to each Cadet. In turn they were to announce their names, the Cadets, the Colonel explained that the Local offices held therein. This innovation was quite delightful, and for the next few minutes we were regaled, in tabloid form, with the histories of mearly seventy Cadets. It was easily apparent during this navel recital that the Salvatiousis audience loves a worker. There has not been a single "slacker" among these Cadets; all were able to state that they were active in some capacity in their respective Corps. One, as the Principal facetiously remarked had been "ten Local Officers rolled into one," having held ten positions!

The "Founders' Centenary" aspect

The "Founders' Centenary" aspect The "Founders' Centenary" aspect was not lost sight of. Choruses of long ago were revived—refrains which stired the memories and hearts of many a veteran. Among them were Colonels Morehen and Adby—two warriors brave of the old school. They sang, in duet, a chorus

Adby—two warriors brave of the old school. They sang, in duet, a chorus that was popular when they were Cadets—"Pull, Soldiers, pull, we'll pull the glory down."

To revert to the introduction of the individual Cadets, several unusual incidents were disclosed. There are two Cadets who are the children of Officers—Cadet Gladys Square-briggs, daughter of Field-Major and Mrs. Squarebriggs, of Ermitford, and Cadet. Laura Jordan, daughter of Commandant and Mrs. Jordan, of Kingston, who, it is interesting to know, is the eldest of eleven children nine of whom are girls! A married couple is a circumstance peculiar to this Session. The baby Corps of Georgetown came into the picture for a brief space, when the first Cadet from that year-old Corps spoke.

The cup of expectation was not yet exhausted. Speakers were next called upon to represent their Division. They did so worthily—more so in that they had been unwarned. The honored ones were: (Women) Cadet Bridle, for London; Cadet Collins, for Toronto West; Cadet Leach, for Hamilton; (Men) Cadet Dadd, for Sydney; Cadet McLean, for Hallfax, and Cadet Price, for Saint_John.

A Picturesque Sight

A Picturesque Sight

I.L.-Colonel Saunders had heard a 1.1. Colonel Saunders bad heard a group of vocalists singing on the provious afternoon. The group of lads under the leafy maple on the Training Garrison grounds, with the setting sun gilding the seene with a golden glow, had formed a picture-sque sight. The singers were enlisted to give an item on this afternoon's program: they sang with much sweetness and charm: "Walking walking on the King's shall go at last,

Walking on the King's Highway."

so to speak, in recording the events of the night meeting.
Colonel Morchen had just started the Prayer-meeting when a somewhat startling interruption took place. A man, whose white hair betokened an advanced age, rushed down the aisle erying in a loud voice,
"Colonel Morchen. Colonel Morchen
. I used to be a good Soldier
. I'm a sinner . I want God to save me . I want to onjoy the service of God as I used to do." With that the man sank on his knees at the mercy-seat. The crowd stared; Salvationists rejoiced, and many a fervent "Hallelujah" was heard.
It was learned that the man was heard.

It was learned that the man was It was learned that the man was an early-lay trophy of grace, converted under Major McElhiney, when he was a Captain. In an evil hour the poor fellow fell. But now he has uttered the Psalmist's prayer—"Restore unto me the jey of Thy Salvainon"—and experienced the Psalmist's restoration. It was a beautiful sight to see his old "Captain" dealing with him and pointing him back to the Fold from which he had strayed.

The kneeling penitent was quickly joined by nine others; some had never before been to The Army; a young lady—a French-Canadian—was visiting her parents who have lately been carolled as Solilers of the Torunto Temple. It will be a changed young woman who returns to Montreal.

Joys of Soul-Winning
An army of fishers did valiant service, among whom the Cadets were foremost. They tastad, perhaps in a different sense than ever before, the joys of soul-winning, and were as "giants refreshed with new wine."
With such a gracious climax it may be assumed that the exercises which receded it were of quite an unusual character. They were. It was the sort of meeting that Cadets will enter in their diarries as "memorable," "great," or perhaps a more lurid term might be used, such as "top-notch." But no matter what adjective was employed, it would not be an exaggeration.

The late-comers found standing room only. The platform was a solid phalamx of navy blue, relieved only by the eager, hopeful faces of the Cadets. Among the celebrities in the "front row" a stranger was noticed, who was later introduced as Brother Cadets. Among the celebrities in the front row" a stranger was noticed, who was later introduced as Brother A. E. Copping, of London, England, who is on a world-tour in the interests of Army literature. Brother Capping spoke with enthusiasm of what he had witnessed in Australia of The Army's work, especially the prison operations. His impression of The Army abroad, as at home, was Iersely and charmingly summed up thus: "It's a lovely Army!" Brother Copning then gave a thrilling recital thus: "It's a lovely Army!" Brother Copping then gave a thrilling recital of his conversion sixteen years ago. Could anything more mellowing lave fellowed this soul-gripping testimony than the duet by our Territorial Leader and Mrs. Maxwell? The power of song had been ably demonstrated during the day of big things; here, again, it proved its value.

Splendid Sacrifice

Splendid Sacrifice

The Commissioner commented upon the splendid sacrifice of parents which had made possible this flesh and blood offering of seventy lives on the alter of service. As members of the Centenary Session he hoped they would "catch the spirit of the Founder; we knew him," he said, "as a master-lover of souls. I have seen him when he had passed his eightich hirthday, swaying with emotion on the platform; his heart of love sparkling in his eyes; that love and passion burned just as brightly when he was old as when a youth."

The grand strains of "Atonement." by the Briat; the sweet appeal in "List! to the Veice of Jesus," by the Songsters (Leader F. Jones), were (Continued on page 12)

We enjoy the former. We must discharge the latter. How can we do so to the best advantage of the great cause we represent?  We have voluntarily bound ourselves together in a body we call a fand, so that corporately we might act in a much stronger and more effective manner than individually. Ten men, or twenty men, proclaiming the Gospel on their instruments with a reasonable amount of efficiency are infinitely more powerful

Realizing this, we deliberately purousselves for this one purpose under a form of government which is designed to co-ordinate all our efforts into one big spearhead that will find the joints in the sinners' armor. So a good motto for our Army Bands might be, "In things essential, unity. In all things, charity."  The necessity for unity must be apparent to all. "Order is Heaven's first law." So we feel no computetion in subordinating our own ideas for the good of the whole.  These obvious facts dispet the tion arose.

The March was characterized by a well-defined rhythm, and bad a wonderful influence on the combatants, cheering them up and keeping them together in their long and wearisome journeys. Because of the purpose to which such pieces were written, they were called "Marches."

We know from old and experienced "Regimentals" that it was the music of their bands that enabled them and their weary coincades to continue on the march when they would otherwise have given in.

When in the battle of Quebec, in 1759, the valiant Scots began to waver, the music of the bagpines, coming from afar off, was heard, and the soldiers, spurred on by the martial strains, turned again to the foe and conquered. "Die Wach! am Rhein," a German folk song transformed into a barch, exercised a mighty influence in the war of 1870 between Germany and France. France.
It is therefore impossible to devote France.

It is therefore Impossible to devote too much care and attention to the production of spirited and exciting marches. Just as the soldiers of the seventeenth ceutiny needed theering and encouraging, so to-day there are thousands of poor souls in sin and amoure's darkness, to whom the march of life seems very wearisome and the road very hard, waiting for some one to take them the message of hope. I think of a comrade in our Corps. One beautiful autum Saturday night, our Sand was swinging along the main street of our town towards the main street of our town towards the Hall, when a woman in a public-buse, hearing the music, left her associates and toflowed the march down to the Hall, where she got gloriously converted. The next night her husband came to the meeting and got converted also, and to-day the whole family are fully-informed Soldiers of the Corps.

This is why we play our marches. are fully-uniformed Soldlers of the Corps.
This is why we play our marches. Thank God for such an opportunity.

bogey raised in many men's minds by the much-abused word "Discipline". How some of us hated that word in the World War! Many injustices were committed in that name. Yet without discipline victory would have been impossible. So it is with us in our Salvation War.

been impossible. So it is with us in our Salvation War.

Discipline need not be irksome. The spirit in which we submit to it is the main concideration. Realizing its necessity, we shall take a pride in the high standard our Band obtains in this particular. There will develop in us that quality called by our military friends "esprit de corps," meaning an intense regard for the honor of the body to which we helong. Then we shall hesitate to do anything that will reflect on the good name of our Band. To us our fellow Bandsman will be the hest set of men we know. Our Bandmaster's word will be law. Our Corps and The Army will be sacred to us.

We shall order our conduct in every detail to harmonize with the high level marked out for us. Cheerfully we shall practise the personal self-denial necessary to make the Band as a whole effective in its work. The feam will be greater than the individual. We shall realize the necessity of mutual support.

In all these things we have a common basis. For did we not all commence at the same hallewed spot—the penitent-form?

In the absence of the General, Commissioner Catherine Booth ex-pressed her own pleasure in the presence of Commissioner Lucy in London. Speaking of the work in Australia, the Commissioner was full of gratitude to God for the progress made during recent years in that vast country. "I think I may say that there is absolutely no question of our future in Australia. I have no thought other than that The Army is out to win from cern students. thought other than that The Army is out to win from every standpoint. Take, for instance, the civic standpoint. "I was being honored by a civic reception in a town, and after several persons had spoken, a Methodist Minister rose and spoke very highly of the work of The Army, and finished up by saying that had there been no Methodist Church there would have been no General Booth, and no Salvation Army; so the Methodists must regard themselves as parents of The Salvation Army, Hardly had he sat down when the Canon of the English Church junped to his feet. Where did you Methodists come from? Had there been no Methodists; therefore, if you are the Father of The Salvation Army—then the English Church is its Grandfuther?"

The feelings of Lt.-Commissioner Vlas, the next speaker, were mixed as he farewelled from comrades with whom he had had very happy associations for three and a half years, to take command of The Army's valiant forces in his Homeland, Holland. Commissioner Mapp was full of outspoken entusiasms concerning the calibre, loyalty and whole-heartedness of the personnel of The Army in the eight countries from which he has just returned. From the honored leaders of The Army forces right down to the latest recruit, the Commissioner had nothing but good to say. "The Salvation Army still posessesse its love; it still has the right spirit; it is faced with many problems, but on behalf of our people, whether Leaders, Officers or Soldiers, there is no tendency to shirk responsibility, but a greater determination than ever to face it and to look to God for glorious results. I am sure when the Chief of the Staff sees the General next he will be able to cheer his heart with this report concerning the work in these eight territories."

Well Worth Waiting For

"Twenty-two years ago," said Colonel Hargrave, the Property Servetary, who accompanied the Controls shower for the opening ceremony, "I visited Tweed for the first time and remember the babbling needed something done to it then." A long time to wait, one would say, but the Corps at Tweed has a Chadel now well worth waiting for.

After the opening song, Ensign Rawlins ted in prayer. Major Hest their welcomed the Commissioner on healf of the Tweed Corps, at the same time introducing him to the andience. Of all the welcomes given to Camda's Army Leader, none have been more heavily and sinerer than that accorded him by the citizens of Tweed as he rose in speak. In a moment the Commissioner was right up close to his hearers, who hung on his words with the deepest interest, at the conclusion of which, he solemuly declared the midding open to the Glory of God, and for the Salvation of statis. It was a very happy occasion for the old-timers to meet again their old friend Colonel Hargrave. The Colonel's words, recalling the old days brought back many precions memories Great work was done for the Kingdom in those days, and praise God, the work still goes on. The Commissioner's words of enlogy for the work and initiative of the Corps officers, Captains Taylor and Allen, resulting in such a splendid new home for the Corps and the Officers, were well deserved and well received. The Captain spoke briefly, expressing deep gratification for all that had been accomplished.

A God-Given Message

A God-Given Message

The Commissioner's final words were of the nature of a Bible message of the highest significance. It was a message well-timed, Grad-given, and that mel a ready response in the hearts of the people. At the Commissioner's invitation, three people held up namds for prayer, and had not a had electrical storm innervened and put out the lights, mercy-seal scenes would undunbtedly have graced the opening service of the new Hall.

Fortunately the lights came on again, before the people hal left the building, and the Commissioner was able to meet a great many of The Army friends and contrades of Tweed.

PROMOTED TO GLORY BANDSMAN ELDRIDGE.

BANDSMAN ELDRIDGE,
North Toronto
In the early hours of August 24th, there passed to his eternal reward, in the person of Eundsman Eldridge, one who through long residence in the district, and connection with North Toronto Corps Inad become well-known and highly respected.

A thorough Salvationist, one of the old school, our comrade gloried in the war. Ever to the fore, testifying for His Lord, seeking by personal contact to bring others into the light, our promoted comrade is greatly missed, by his fellow-Salvationists as well as by his good wife and family. "A good father, and a loving hashand," can be said readily of him.

Brother Eddridge came into touch with The Salvation Army at the early age of fifteen. Converted to find at that age, he at once became a Soldier of the Corps at Besty Heath, where he spent a few happy years. Removing to Darriford, our contrade linked up with the local Corps, and served as a Soldier and Bandsman for nearly ten years.

Soldier and boundaries of years, Coming with his wife and young family to Canada over twenty years ago, he at once joined Riverdale Corps, but on moving to North Tor-onto he became connected with the then "Farthest North" Corps, York-

With the opening of North Toronto Corps our promoted comrade transferred and served for some years as Bandmaster. Speaking of him at the Memorial service, a convanie-worker said that he was a valuable and respected member of the Censis, Board, one whose opinion and decisium were formed under the guidance of Almighty God.

It is Important to Teach the Children Good English and Pleasing Manners

NE DAY I was on a visit with my four-year-old daughter. There were no other children in the house, and she was getting lonely. "Lend her a bock." I said. They could not find a picture book. "Any book with large print will do," I told them.

A book with good plain letters was brought. To their astonishment the little girl was quite happy, reading words here and there.

words here and there.

"She should not know how to read at her age," objected a woman.

"Why not?" I asked.

"It's bad for her health, was the reply.

This child had not been urged to This child had not been urged to read. At an early age, I had given her alphabet blocks with which to play. As she wanted to know what the blocks meant, I told her the names of the letters. From that, it was not long before she knew the words under the pictures on the blocks and was picking them out of every book she came across. It añorded her much amusement for a rainy day. Knowing something about books, she was, later, less timid at the idea of going to school.

There are other things, however,

There are other things, however, There are other things, however, more important. Before reaching the school age a child should be taught to speak good English and should inderstand and practise pleasing manners. Some children are entirely untrained in the little courtesies before they enter school, and often school does not improve them in the least in this respect.

dren Good English and Pleasing mers

"I do not know what kind of manners the children are taught," remarked a woman to me once. "They seem ever so much rougher than before they went to school."

If the home influence does not keep children as polite ag they should be, it is unreasonable to expect the school to do so. It is the home life which has the most influence, it very largely determines the future. Before school age, when we think our children are learning nothing, they are really learning a great deal. It rests with ms to see what they learn. In the bright sayings of children we often get an insight into their daily home life.

The years before seven are the most impressionable, and their influences continue throughout life.

A child comes into the world knowing nothing. It does not know how to walk, to eat, to speak. Why not teach it to do all these things correctly, to save learning twice?

These lessons should not be made difficult; all of us remember hest the experiences most enjoyed.

difficult; all of us remember hest the experiences most enjoyed.

We spoke in the beginning of reading. If your little one learns to recognize the letters and some of our common words it should be ag an amusement, a game. Do not commit the mistalte of making it a lesson All life is a lesson if you want to make and call it such. Accept as much as possible of it in the highest spirit of play and it will bring more joy. Especially, do this with those first few years of a child's life at home when all work should be play.

THE CHALLENGE OF THE

Kasimin and Roes were not sure if their mission had succeeded, even when they emerged once again into the monili brilliance of the tropical might.

The former hissed reproach at the other. Had they succeeded? He was not sure. With his brown eyes blazing hatred he blamed Roes heartlly, "Why did you not support me—? monkey!" he rasped. "Was it for to say not a single word? And you the son of an 'imam,' "he sneered.

Fighting Like Bears

Fighting Like Bears

But that sneer was too veromous.

Without uttering a single word in reply, Roes flew like a mad dog at the throat of his enemy-companion, and the two were soon fighting like she bears. No tules governed that combat. Nails, teeth, fists and feet all played their part. Ten minutes afterwards, and the boys were still righting. The blood began to flow, and both boys were panting for breath. Then Roes gained the upperhand and gave Kasimin a punmelling too cruel for description in these pages.

hand and gave Kasimin a pummelling too cruel for description in these pages.

The specing names were withdrawn and Roes left the vanquished son of the headman.

He stood for a moment, a little at a loss whether to go back and report to the headman and his father, the "imam." or what to do.

The light from the little Army Hall and the sound of singing attracted him. With bruises appearing, and blood smeared still on his face, he strolled over to the meeting house a place he had been strictly enjoined not to attend by the "imam."

He enjoyed himself. The singing made him feel happy, and he understood what was being said. It was so different to the gatherings at the village temple, where the "imam" spoke in Arabic, understood by none of his hencers, and only a little by himself, and the whole congregation, conposed of men only, lolled atomd inside and outcide of the prayer-hur, and at a given cue from the priest raised their shout, of Chanted the name of Mahomet.

talling but it was such a fat occue, and tried in the fine on the end of a stick would have been such a delicate morsel for supper—and he did not know it was the Christian custom to sit still while the white lady spoke. Then Captain asked Roes in the indidic of her address how he came by his brusses, and he somehow liked her for it.

Everything was new to him, even the story she had told of Jesus, and he liked it well.

Thus, when at the end of the meeting the dark congregation bowed their heads in prayer, and Captain Lan Sinchar asked if there was anyone there who would like to serve Jesus Christ, Roes thought he would. He lanew little except what he had lead in the meeting and what the boys had speken of from time to time in the village, and he certainly did not comprehend the Captain's meaning when she gave the invitation to the penitent-form.

What was the penitent-form? Roes did not know, but there was an urge in his beart to serve Jesus, whatever that really meant, and he felt he had to do something.

So he crept forward in the flickering light of the rocking oil lamp and stood in the aisle at the front, staring in mute appeal at the Captain.

Such simple faith yet complete darkness touched him to kneel deeply.

Eagerly she told him to kneel down. He knelt down in the aisle.
